Grammar:

To form words in "Cheldzin," you follow a simple rule: split the word into its component parts and capitalize each part. Here's what I mean:

Take a character and split it in half. For example "Yeciv" becomes "Yec". Do this for any character in the Cheldzin alphabet. Sentences are created based on context and words often have "Qua" in them. Sentences can be formed using a technique that Cheldzin calls "Qua-Pa". Aka "Simple structure" when translated into english. Now, If you want to form a sentence, you must also capitalize any new word you add to your splitted word. Here's a breakdown.

"Yeciv" becomes "Yec".

"Uip" becomes "Ui".

If a word is longer than 3 characters, it is split in half, if a 3 letter character comes after the first character, it is split. But any 3 letter characters after the 2nd character remain unchanged. Every 1st letter of the character is capitalized if latinized. If not latinized, there is a " " in the beginning of a new character

Here's a sample sentence in latinized Cheldzin: "YecUiPaqKuPa" and with the characters "☼'ö'☼'✱'✱" which translates to "The sun is a star."

Another important thing to note is that Cheldzin doesn't have to be ordered a certain way. You can create words with different meanings. You can also word things in many ways with the "WeQuaKeWaPe (☼'•'☼'†≤)" alphabet. In english it is known as the "Kewa" alphabet. Since nothing is gendered and the " "s in each character is the grammar, Things are written more in context.

Numbers: Numbers in Cheldzin are pronounced as followed:

1=Kui

2=Eo

3=Ta

4=Fa

5=Eak

6=Yi

7=Zi

8=Chi

9=Tre

Double digits and beyond are formed by taking the number you want to create and adding a number to the end. Here's a example:

121="Kui-Eo-Kui"

Numbers are pretty simple as you just add the number you want and it is pronounced in a literal way and similar to how Belgium French numbers are.

Extra characters: !, @, #, $, %, ^, &, *, (, ), -, +, =, {, }, [, ], \, |, ;, :, ", ', ?, /, <, >, ~, ` and "." are pronounced as they are in English and any other language.

Cheldzin in Cheldzin translates to "☀️" "Yei-Zii". It translates to "Compassion" in English.
